In-kind contributions are goods and/or services donated instead of cash contributions. In-kind contributions are recorded at fair market value. Current fair market value must be established on an objective and clearly measurable basis. Examples are normal rent charges for a facility or equipment or a retail price for a commodity. Contributions of goods are deductible for income tax purposes to the extent allowed by law, providing all requirements are met. It is the sole responsibility of the donor to establish the value of an in-kind donation. In some instances, a written appraisal may be required. Please provide written verification of fair market value for your in-kind contribution..
